Since the framework consists of four categories of information quality dimensions, we refer to it as the categorical information quality framework (CIQF). We present a critical analysis of the CIQF, identify a number of methodological issues arising from its development and describe a replication of the study that we are currently undertaking.

Kantian ethics and the ethics of Kant are fundamentally separate ideas. The ethical framework Kant laid out in the Groundwork of the Metaphysics of morals can be interpreted in a way which Kant himself would not adopt. This framework is based upon his three categorical imperatives, which Kant suggests are synonymous with each other.
